

	Scholarly Communication: journal or papers, book chapters etc.	Science Communication: newspaper articles, social media, podcasts etc.
Topic and Scoping	- Internal and external triggers initiate a publication process - Determine content focus - Optional: write and submit abstract if necessary	- Internal and external triggers initiate a publication process - Define target group and communication objective - Optional: consultation with the communications department on topics such as support options and integration into the institution's communication strategy
Formal preparation	- Includes decisions on topics such as: open access and open data strategy, publication medium, export control, literature review in addition to the previous work - Synergies with other steps in the research process, especially formal requirements such as regulations from funding institutions or industry partners	- Selection of a communication medium or format that reaches the target group - Optional: research additional background information to create understanding and context for the target group
Editing	- Convert artifacts, findings and the knowledge generated into text and text-supplementing elements - Optional: generate additional artefacts and findings - Internal review and discussion and approval by all parties involved - Derive the methodology to be described from the previous steps of data generation - Publish and reference artifacts and findings - Optional: publish preprint	- Convert artifacts, findings and the knowledge generated into open formats that reaches the target group - Optional: generate additional artefacts and findings that reach the target group - Internal review and discussion and approval by all parties involved
Submission	- Includes submission to the publication medium, peer review and subsequent revision (backstep to editing phase), final publication - Content is more comprehensible for peers because the research data is available and its provenance is clear.	- Autonomous publication or publication of content by service providers - Optional: correction loops with service providers such as newspapers
Dissemination	- Disseminate publication in accordance with funding requirements - Target group-oriented communication by sharing text and/or research data	- Encourage discussions with the target group, obtain feedback from them - Evaluate whether the communication objective has been achieved